“ To me she was just Darlene. We had lots of fun together as children. Her Dad, Bill, was my brother. We used to play a lot in the old barn on their property when we visited them from Indiana, and we both loved to go walking along the road picking wild strawberries and talking about what we were going to do when we got grown. I was the baby of the family so I wasn't but about 2 years older than her. We had a lot of talks about being adults, but once we were grown we lost touch. I remember her fondly and love her still.

“ Darlene was a real jewel. She loved her family dearly. One of my fondest memories was trying to teach her how to drive. She looked at me and said, "James knows how to drive, so I don't really need to."
